CONVENTION,
Between his Majesty and the Emperor of the Romans.

Signed at Vienna, June 20, 1800.

His Majesty, the Emperor of the Romans, and his Majesty the King of Great Britain, have judged that it was conformable to the interest of their Crowns, and to the good of the common cause, to concert with each other on the best manner of giving effect to the union of their efforts against the common enemy in the present campaign. In consequence of which the Baron De Thugut, Grand Crois of the order of St. Stephen, his Imperial Majesty's minister of conferences, & commissary general & minister Plenipotentiary in his provinces of Italy, Iliria, & Dalmatia, &c. and the Right Hon. Gilbert Lord Minto, Peer of Great Britain, one of his Britannic Majesty's most honorable Privy Council, & his Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court of Vienna, being furnished on the part of their aforesaid Imperial and Britannic Majesties, with the powers requisite for discussing and arranging this important object—the said plenipotentiaries, after having respectively exchanged their full powers, have agreed upon the following articles:—

Art. I. In order to relieve the preying necessities of the finances of his Imperial Majesty, under the enormous expences already incurred, and which remain to be incurred during the present campaign, his Britannic Majesty shall advance to his aforesaid Imperial Majesty by way of Loan, the sum of £2,000,000 sterl. This sum shall be divided into three parts and paid at three different periods preferably in specie: so that the first third £666,666 13s. 4d. shall be paid in the first days of the month of July; the second third of the like sum in the first days of September; and the remaining third in the first days of the month of December.

Art. II. During the whole continuance of the war, and during the six months which shall follow the conclusion of a peace between Austria and France, his Imperial Majesty shall not be bound to pay any interest upon the sum of two millions advanced, as stipulated in the preceeding article. Great Britain consented to take this charge upon her own account until the period above mentioned: But on the expiration of the term of six months after the conclusion of peace, his Imperial Majesty shall pay for the future to the British Government, or to the individuals who shall be pointed out by the British Government, an annual rent of annual rents, making altogether the amount of the interests of the two millions advanced; which interest shall be calculated at the same rate as the interests of the loan made on account of the British Government in the present year. His Imperial Majesty shall moreover pay annually to the British Government the sum of £20,000 sterl at two periods, that is to say, £10,000 every six months, which sum will be employed in the successive purchase and reduction of the principal of the two millions, according to the method adopted by the British Government in its own loans.

Art. III. Their Imperial and Britannic Majesties mutually promise each other to carry on the war against the French Republic, during the present campaign, with all possible vigour and to employ in it all their respective means by land and sea concerting together, as occasion shall require, on the most advantageous manner of reciprocally employing their forces by land and sea to the support of their operations against the common enemy. His Imperial Majesty shall be careful to complete his armies of Germany and of Italy in proportion to the losses which they have sustained, in order always, as far as possible, to act against the enemy with the same number of effective men, conformably to the statements which his Imperial Majesty caused to be confidentially communicated to the British Government on the opening of the campaign.

Art. IV. The Bavarian troops, those of Wurtemberg, and the Swiss regiments in the pay of Great Britain, shall be at the disposition of his Imperial Majesty, to form a part of his army in Germany, and to be employed there in operations against the enemy, in conformity to the Conventions and Capitulations concluded on this subject by the King of Great Britain, His Britannic Majesty shall take the necessary measures for the reinforcement of the army of his Imperial Majesty in Germany as great a number as possible of German and Swiss troops.

Art. V. Their Imperial and Britannic Majesties engage during the whole continuance of the present convention not to make a separate peace with the French republic, without the previous and express consent of each other. They engage likewise not to treat with the enemy, nor to make overtures either for a private peace or receive from him any general pacification, without making, mutually, communications of them with openness, and acting in every respect in perfect concert.

Art. VI. The duration of the present Convention is fixed for the term of one year, to be computed from the 1st of August, 1800, until the end of February 1801. From the month of December, immediately after the acquittal of the last payment of the stipulated advances the two High Contracting Parties shall enter into deliberation and confidential explanation upon the determinations that they may think necessary to adopt for the future, according to circumstances, and their mutual convenience.

Art. VII. The present Convention shall be ratified in due form by their Imperial and Britannic Majesties, and the respective ratifications shall be exchanged at Vienna, in the space of six weeks, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof, We, the undersigned, furnished with the full powers of their Imperial and Britannic Majesties, have in their names signed the present convention, and have affixed thereto the seal of our arms.

ARMY OF ITALY.

TURIN, 7 Melfidor June 26.

The army of reserve and that of Italy for no longer but one and the same under the name of the army of Italy. Gen. Massena is commander in chief of the whole. Gen. Berthier has arrived at Turin to organise the government of Piedmont. General Soult took possession of all the fortifications of Genoa on the 4th. The whole of the artillery we left there remains, together with some pieces belonging to the Austrians. The English were only able to carry off ten pieces, which were stationed on the Mole. The Austrian troops which formed the garrison of Genoa marched out on the 4th and 5th at four in the morning.—M. de Hohenzollern, who commanded in Genoa, conducted himself with openness, dignity, and honor—Savona and Ceva are occupied by the French army.—The Chief Conful arrived here to day. He alighted at the citadel, which he inspected, and having surveyed it, immediately departed. We have found there immense magazines. In one alone we found more than 8000 pair of blankets for the hospital. The citadel of Turin is superb—it contains more than 300 pieces of cannon. It is calculated that the artillery of all the places surrendered by the convention of the 7 Prairial amounts to more than 2000 pieces, and the gunpowder found in them to two millions of pounds.

ARMY OF THE RHINE.

Letter from Gen. Moreau, commander in chief of the army of the Rhine, to the Minister at War.

Neresboden, 5 Melfidor, June 24.

"I send you a copy of my dispatches to the Chief Conful, respecting the Battle of Hochstet. Gen. Kray abandons Ulm. This success is of the highest importance; but it was an arduous task to obtain it. Reprefent to yourself a river passed without boats without bridges, in a word, only by swimming and courage.

Copy of a Letter addressed to the Chief

Conful, by general Moreau, commander in chief of the Army of the Rhine.

Head-quarters, Dillingen,
3 Melfidor, June 22.

At length Citizen Conful, we shall compel gen. Kray to abandon Ulm, his chief support. A decisive success has just procured us the double advantage of almost deciding on the fate of Germany, and of vindicating French honor from a defeat at the beginning of this century. I fondly hope, that it will have some influence in the negotiations which your victories in Italy are on the point of opening. Observing that the Austrian army kept close to its camp at Ulm, which gave it the advantage of easily debouching on both banks of the Danube, while it consequently prevented us from making any material progres in Germany; and not having been inclined to give battle at Blaubeuren, left the enemy should avail himself of my movement, in order to advance upon Münchingen, connect himself with the Tyrol, and send down into Italy a corps of troops that might have much embarrassed you, I determined to make Gen. Lecourbe execute several manœuvres upon the Lech, in the hopes that I should thereby force Gen. Kray, to march to protect Bavaria, and he continued to manœuvre in our rear, the battle of the 16th (June 5) which he lost, obliged him to repel the Danube.—I then formed the project of passing that river below Ulm, that I might thus separate him from his magazines at Donawerth and Ratibon, and by this means compel him to withdraw or come to battle. This movement was both difficult and dangerous, as we had neither bridges nor boats, the enemy having destroyed the former and sunk the latter. I reinforced general Lecourbe's corps with five battalions and five regiments of cavalry; and I charged him to take possession of one of the bridges on the Danube, between Dillingen and Donawerth. Lecourbe executed this movement with an intrepidity worthy of the highest prides.—After having secured the point of Landberg and Augsburg, and left them a sufficient force to protect his rear against the corps of the prince de Reus, rationed in the Tyrol, and whom generals Nansouti, and Molitor have defeated every time he attempted to debouch, he advanced towards Dillingen, and Blenheim, and Hochstet. I advanced the right wing of Gen. Grenier's corps to the Danube, at Gunzburg, and the left of Kienhoff. Gen. Richepant placed upon the two banks of the Iller, covered the road from Ulm to Münchingen, and protected our communication with Switzerland which were much threatened by the detachment of the enemy. The three divisions of reserve, under my immediate command, were between the Kammlach and the Mindal, destined to support the attack of general Lecourbe, in case it should succeed, and the attack with gen. Grenier was to make upon Gunzburg, in case the former should fail.

The army was situated on the 29th Prairial, (June 18.) After several actions, in which the enemy was compelled to fall back upon Ulm, general Lecourbe, on that day, made some demonstrations on the Bridge of Dillingen, and in consequence of the report made by his reconnoitering parties, he determined seriously to attempt the bridges of Grenheim, Blenheim, & Hochstet. Eighty naked swimmers armed with muklets and knapsacks, which were sent over after them, in two very small boats, took possession of the villages of Grenheim, and Blenheim, and made themselves masters of some pieces of cannon, which were manned by artillery men who had passed over on ladders placed upon the wrecks of the bridge; all of them maintained their positions with extraordinary courage, while a number of miners and bridge builders were employed, under the enemy's fire, in repairing the bridges over which a force was passed to oppose the reinforcements which the enemy were posting towards the point where the object of the attacks could be no longer doubtful. The 94th demi-brigade passed over after the swimmers, and with the greatest bravery maintained themselves in the villages of Grenheim, of Blenheim, Cangenau, and Schavengen, where gen. Mavigny was slightly wounded; but this demi-brigade would have found it extremely difficult to maintain these positions, notwithstanding the exertions of the heroic courage, were it not drons of the first regiment of carabiners, conducted by citizen Gimbot. They had just passed, one by one, over the bridge of Grenheim; they were joined by some hussars, belonging to general Lecourbe's escort; they overpowered a body of the enemy's cavalry; three times their number, took six pieces of cannon, 250 horses, and several stand of colours; 4 pieces of artillery, which the enemy left as a reinforcement, were also carried away; the whole of the corps that came from Donawerth, was almost destroyed, the brigade of general Level set out in pursuit of them; it remained to make head against the corps that was coming from Hochstet, Dillingen, and Lavingen. After several charges, in which the carabiners, cuirassiers, the 9th and 6th cavalry, and 9th hussars distinguished themselves, we took 3000 prisoners several pieces of cannon, and stand of colours. The enemy's forces had considerably encouraged; the troops from Ulm began to arrive, but the bridges of Dillingen, and Lavingen being re-established, the divisions of Decaen and Grandjean were enabled to join with their cavalry, and to concur in the last charge of about 450 horses, drove the enemy beyond the Dietz & left us masters of the positions of Gundelchingen. The 6th of the chasseurs, the 13th cavalry, the 4th hussars, and the 11th chasseurs, particularly distinguished themselves in that affair. The rest of these divisions, and that of general Leclerc; rapidly crossed the Danube and on their arrival formed themselves so as to be able to repulse the attacks which we presumed the enemy would attempt the next day. General Grenier had likewise prepared himself to pass the Danube at Gunzburg; but the enemy, who had antecedently cut down some arches of the bridge had covered the part which remained on his side with brush, tar, and other combustible materials, that were to consume it at the moment of our attack. This the enemy did not fail to execute the moment they saw our swimmers plunge into the water. Some of the latter had the hardihood to attempt to extinguish the fire but it was impossible.

The next day the corps of General Grenier advanced to Lavingen. General Richepant made preparations for investing Ulm, as soon as the hostile army should abandon it. These battles took place on the too famous theatre of Hochstet. General Lecourbe, who displayed on this occasion the most distinguished courage and talents, was perfectly well seconded by generals Gudin, Montrichard Desjardins, Laval, Schinner, and Puted. The corps of cavalry conducted by generals Houtpolt and Demigne have done prodigies of courage. The conduct of the swimmers, commanded by citizen Begromet, is a train of intrepidity of which there are few examples. Citizen Caban and Galbord superintended the operations of the artillery and the engineers, and displayed equal skill and bravery. The chief of the staff will lend you a more detailed account of this affair. He will particularly all those to whom I have given advancement and marks of honor. I will lend you the colours by citizen Vacelay, aide-de-camp to general Lecourbe, and by the officer who commanded the swimmers. The 10th and 57th light brigade, the first battalion of the forty-fifth and first of the 57th and 58th; in a word, the whole of the troops who were engaged in this battle have given reiterated proofs of intrepidity. The loss of the enemy, without including the killed and wounded, is about 5,000 prisoners, 20 pieces of cannon, and 5 stand of colours. The following day the 6th regiment of chasseurs took a convoy of wagons loaded with corn. Kray has just quitted Ulm, and is reported to be advancing to attack us. We intend to save him half the way.

WEEKLY RETROSPECT OF POLITICS.

From the (London) General Evening Post, of Saturday July 5.
We regret to say, that since our last Retrospect, the apprehensions which we then entertained have been realized in Italy, to their fullest extent; and all our hopes and wishes have been frustrated, by the overwhelming numbers of the enemy, and the ill fortune of the Austrian armies.

—We proceed to the task imposed on us, of tracing in a brief, but peripatetic manner, the events that, in all probability, will lead to a termination of the war between Austria and the French Republic. It has been before stated, that, as soon as General Melas was undecided respecting the forces and designs of the French Consular Army of Reserve, he sent from Turin orders to general Ott, before Genoa to raise the blockade of that fortress; but, in the then imperfet state of our information, we considered as fortunate the accident by which this order had been counteracted. On better grounds, we now experience the unpleasant reflection that, had general Ott, promptly obeyed the order, the result might have been more favorable to our Allies, as the decision at least protracted till the necessary assistance could have been afforded for turning the fortune of the field. It appears, that, on general Melas's perceiving the advances of Bonaparte's forces into Lombardy, in his anxiety to prevent the enemy from crossing the Po, he issued, on the 2d ult., the most urgent orders to the Commanders in the Genoese, to march and defend the passage of that river, and cover Tortona and Alessandria.

As the French did not pass the Po till the 7th, and the march from Genoa thither was at least performed by Gen. Ott in three days, it seems very probable that, had his officers immediately obeyed the orders from Melas of the 2d, he might have accomplished the important object specifically required, some at least, of the Austrian magazines might have been saved; and the imperial chief gained time to devise means either of defence or retreat. Fate, however had ordained otherwise. General Ott, preferred waiting to receive Massena's surrender, which occupied him till the 8th.* He then crossed the Appenines with 15,000 men, and arrived on the 5th at Voghera, where he was joined by 5000 who had been fatigued for the defence of the Po, but had been driven back by the French when they puffed that river.

The French army under Berthier, as our readers may recollect, had assembled at Stradella; but its advanced guard under Lannes, was at Broni (about midway between Stradella and Voghera) at the time general Ott reached the latter place. The next day (the 9th) Lannes pushed his division forward, supported by Victor and Watrin, and found the Imperial army occupying the heights of Casteggio, a village about halfway between Voghera and the Po, and between the former place and Broni. Here the enemy commenced the attacks about noon; and after a most obstinate contest, in which the numbers on each side seemed to have been pretty equal, and the advantage was for a long time doubtful, nay, in many points in favor of the Austrians, the latter were at length broken, and repelled as far as Montebello, with the loss of 3000 killed and wounded, five pieces of cannon, and 3000 prisoners.

By this time the Austrian chief, Melas, finding that the Po had been passed by the enemy, quitted Turin, and concentrated his forces at Alessandria. General Ott continually pressed by the French army flushed with its late successes, fell back on Tortona, and continued his retreat towards Alessandria. When, however, he had reached Marengo, a village three miles E. of that city, and about a mile E. of the Bormida, he was overtaken by the French army with the chief Consul at its head, who had passed from Milan, and crossed the Po, the very day whereon the battle of Casteggio was fought. Melas now joined his forces to those of Ott, attacked the advanced guard of the enemy under Garlanne, at seven in the morning of the 14th, and the battle soon became general.—As a very minute official detail of this ever-to-be-remembered action was given in our last news—it will be only necessary here to state, in general terms, that the battle lasted 14 hours, the opponent armies being all the time within musket-shot of each other; and prodigies of valor were exhibited on both sides.

* It has been naturally conjectured, that Massena's engaging the Austrian forces in negotiation at this juncture was a pre-arranged measure, to enable the consular army, without interruption, to secure the Milaneze, the Austrian magazines, and the passage of the Po.

† Bonaparte did not (as it was supposed) accompany the march towards the capture of Milan; but remained in that city, and sent forward his army under the direction of Berthier.

—At the commencement the advantage was with the Imperialists, who had made 900 prisoners; more than 60 pieces of cannon were several times taken and retaken; twelve charges of cavalry were made with various success, the Austrians constantly making the advances; and, to late as three o'clock in the afternoon, victory seemed ready to declare itself in favor of Melas, whose cavalry routed the whole French line, which retreated in disorder to the village of St. Julian, where, however, Desaix was posted with a corps de reserve. Here the French rallied, and attacked in their turn, led on by general Desaix, who was killed in the charge. The first consul, who felt the importance of the moment, dashed into the midst of the squadrons, animated them by his example and decided the victory. General Melas now attempted to retire towards Genoa; but the French general Chambord, who having been stationed at Bardi, had followed the Austrian chief from Turin, maneuvered in his rear, and cut off his retreat.

The next morning (the 15th) finding the fortune of the day so decided with the French army, Melas judged it proper to send general Skell to Buonaparte; with proposals for an armistice; and a convention was afterwards signed by himself on the one part and the French general Berthier on the other, by which the enemy were put in possession of twelve of the strongest towns and fortresses in Italy, viz. Tortona, Alessandria, Milan, Turin, Pizzighettone, Arona, Placentia, Coni, Cesena, Urbino, Savona, and Genoa; the Austrians only retain Mantua, Pelsicera, Borgo Forte, Ferrara, Tuscany, and Ancora. The armistice was stipulated to continue till an answer could be received from the emperor; but, whatever might be the result, neither army was to commence hostilities without giving ten days notice. The loss of the Imperialists in the dreadful battle of Marengo, is stated by general Berthier at 3000 killed, 5000 wounded (including 7 generals and 400 inferior officers,) 7000 prisoners, 12 standards, and 26 pieces of cannon. That of the enemy at 800 killed (including gen. Desaix, who had just returned from Egypt,) 2000 wounded, and 1,100 prisoners. General Melas is now on the route to Mantua, with the whole of the austrian army.

From the Genoese coast, Suchet has reported to the minister of war at Paris, that in his operations against General Elfitz, between the 27th of May, and the 6th of June, he had taken 2000 prisoners and 30 pieces of cannon. If we may believe the French journals, the execution of the article of the convention signed by general Melas, respecting the surrender of Keith, a met with some obstruction on the part of the British admiral lord Keith; who at first made some objection to delivering up the artillery found therein, and particularly affected a claim to either the possession or the ransom of 119 vessels which he had found in the harbour, and which he insisted were his lawful prizes, as they must have entered after the port had been declared in a state of blockade. We have not, however, yet seen the brave admiral's statement on this subject.

In Suabia, the Imperialists still continue on the defensive; but do not seem strong enough effectually to impede the progress of the enemy.—Augsburgh was taken by general Lecourbe on the 28th May* afterwards evacuated, and again taken possession of on the 12th ult.

The principal object of Moreau at present evidently is, to cut off from general Kray, in Ulm, the supplies which he has hitherto drawn from Donauweitz and Ingolstadt by the navigation of the Danube.—In pursuance of this design, Lecourbe, with the right wing of the army, on the 21st ult., forced the passage of the Danube at Endingen and the memorable village of Blenheim, after a severe contest with the force under general Starzay, who lost (the French) 4000 prisoners, and 14 pieces of cannon. The Hamburg papers speak of armies of Reserve, and other ample preparations by forced levies in Germany, for carrying on the campaign; but these orders having been issued long before the late disastrous events took place, it is very uncertain at present whether the Emperor will persevere in the contest. Meanwhile the confederate chief seems to be arranging a powerful plan of operations against the German army of Suabia, in case the answer of his imperial majesty should not put an end to the campaign. While general St. Suzanne, on the right wing of Moreau, is preparing to make an irruption with a considerable force (which has been collected near Mertz) into Franconia, the division of the army of reserve under general Moncey is marching with 25,000 men from the Milaneze through the Valteline, to attack the Gissons, the principal pacts between Italy and Germany.—Should this plan succeed, with a French army posted in Franconia, another in Bavaria, and a third advancing from Switzerland, marshal Kray must be reduced to the necessity of trying the fate of battle, or submitting to a blockade, by a very superior force.

* No tidings respecting the determination of his Imperial majesty had reached town, when our pa-

Another Secret Expedition, of considerable magnitude, is in a state of forwardness. Large embankments of troops have taken place at Deal, Portsmouth and Plymouth; at the former of which places forty pieces of battering cannon have been shipped. The Quinduine, as usual have been plying into the secrets of its destination, and seem to have come at last to the safe conclusion, that it is either intended to attack the Western coast of France, the Dutch province of Zealand, or the French army in Egypt!!?

A Quadruple Alliance is (we know not on what foundation) said to be formed in the German paniers to be forming between Russia, Prussia, Sweden and Denmark, for restoring peace to Europe. Every thing, indeed, seems at present to lead to a supposition, that Austria will soon come to terms with the French Republic; but the proceedings in Parliament do not encourage any very sanguine hopes that this country will be able, in consequence to relax its exertions.

Yesterdays a quarterly general court was held at the bank. The governor stated to the proprietors that he had received a letter from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, intimating, that it would be a great convenience to the public if the loan of three millions on exchequer bills, which was becoming due at the bank, could be continued until the 5th of July in the ensuing year. He then moved that this leave should be granted, which was carried unanimously,

An authentic account published at Petersberg of the Russian force, states it, including 100,000 irregular troops at 56,000 infantry, and 81,000 cavalry. The Austrian force, according to the statement submitted every three months to the emperor, consisted, at the opening of the campaign, of 322,000 infantry, and 62,000 cavalry.

A letter from Copenhagen positively asserts, that a quadruple alliance between Russia, Prussia, Denmark and Sweden, has been formed for the purpose of effecting a general peace.

Almost a perfect toleration is now allowed in France. The parsons of a district lately petitioned the government for leave to be granted to their former pastor, who had emigrated to England to return to his flock. The application was instantly complied with by the following answer.—"Your Pastor has leave to return to his district, provided he consents to submit to the laws of the Republic." This answer was accompanied by the necessary passports.

The Russian ships of war with their troops from Jersey and Guernsey, have at length sailed for the Baltic. They have during their visits to our ports, gained many material advantages with respect to discipline, improvement in naval tactics, the mode of conducting business in our dock yards, and several other important objects: but we do not recollect any service they have performed for the common cause.

WONDERFUL!!!

The phenomenon of the assemblage of Bees at this place has made its annual return. The two preceding years, they collected at the house of John M'Nair Esq. Judge of the Tennessee District.—They have now assembled at the house of W. P. Anderson Esq. Attorney-General for said District. They have been collecting about fifteen days, from 1 to 5 swarms each day and now consist of between 40 and 50 swarms, and still collect—Possessing at first the same disposition of those that visited the Judge—perfectly harmless, refusing all protection when offered them, using no kind of injury, and to all appearance very uneasy and discontented. Some few days past greater part of them have conformed to be housed in barrels and hives, numbers of swarms together, and have begun their usual labor.

To those who are capable of peeping into the mysterious works of nature, we leave the investigation of this unexampled incident in the history of Bees!

At the September term of the Lexington District Court, John TURNER, who was sent for further trial, from Madison county, charged with horse-stealing, was found guilty, and sentenced to confinement in the jail and Penitentiary House, for and during the term of two years, one twentieth part of the time in the solitary cells, on low and coarse diet, according to law.

By the last mail it appears that the yellow fever has made its appearance in Providence (R. I.) It still continues at Norfolk, and Baltimore—the number of deaths in the latter, are from 25 to 30 per day.

An insurrection was discovered on the 30th ult., amongst the negroes in the neighbourhood of Richmond, Virginia, and some of them are lodged in the jail of that city. It is stated to have been the best planned and most matured of any before attempted.

Piled paper.

The above is corroborated by a gentleman who arrived here a few days hence, directly from Virginia.

BY YESTERDAY'S MAIL.

LONDON, July 24.

A report was so prevalent in the city, so confidentially circulated yesterday, on a general armistice being concluded between France and Austria, that when in the evening we received the Paris Journal to the 21st a day later than those which arrived on Tuesday, we expected to find the armistice officially announced in the Monitor, but on the contrary, the flight notice is not taken of any such event. The only intelligence in the papers is an account of an engagement on the 12th near Frankfort, where the Austrians attacked St. Suzanne, and after a very sharp action which lasted the whole of the day, we suspect the French were defeated. But these armies are playing a final part on the theatre of war, and their operations are of little comparative interest. By a letter from Nuremberg it appears, that a detachment of French troops, consisting of 1400 men, are coming from thence by Wurzburg, to take the Austrians near Frankfort in rear. This is the fashion of the present campaign. Moreau took Kray in rear at Stockach and Ulm; Buonaparte took Melas in rear in Italy; and if the Imperial troops near Frankfort are not alert, they will be surrounded.

ARMY OF THE RHINE.
Letter from an officer of the Etat-Major of the army.

Pfeffersboen, July 6.

We shall soon be masters of Ratibon, we sleep this evening at Freyburg, 8 leagues from Munich, which we have occupied a week.—The enemy are retreating.

Lieut. Gen. St. Suzanne to Gen. Laval, Head-Quarters, Hoechim, July 5.

This day, my dear general, has been a very fortunate one; we are at Zodelheim; the troops have behaved very well; the Polish legion in particular, fought with much bravery. The enemy are retired to the left bank of the Meine.

(Signed) ST. SUZANNE.

The head-quarters were removed to day to Hochil, and we are masters of the heights of Bergheim.

On the 7th Suzanne was before Frankfort. At Hotelil, col. Barbacci, to well known in the affair of Ralstadt, was, with many of the Szekler hussars, cut to pieces by the Poles.

According to letters from Landshut of yesterday, the Imperial army is just now posted between the Ier and the Inn; the head-quarters of gen. Kray were transferred on the 3d from Endingen to Hohenlinden; it is believed he will proceed thence to Haagense. His royal highness the archduke Ferdinand was on the 6th in the evening at Landshut; but every thing announce that the Austrian troops will soon quit that city. The French have occupied Moosburg, and advance 1 on the left bank of the Ier, as far as before Landshut.

The corps of Klenau is still encamped in our neighborhood, and watches the movements of the enemy on the two banks of the Danube. As the latter continue to push forward their patrols, there are frequent skirmishes between the advanced posts. Yesterday there was an engagement towards Hornau: the Au-ans were at first on the point of retreating, but having received reinforcements, they compelled the enemy to return to their former positions. The same day there was a severe skirmish between Neufstadt and Rehlekein; some men were killed and wounded on both sides—an Austrian officer of hussars was made prisoner. The French have about 5000 men at Abach.

Bamberg, July 6.

There is in the environs of Brannau an army of reserve of forty battalions and ten regiments of cavalry. We hope that an armistice will take place immediately. The different corps which were traversing the country of Bamberg, have slackened their march.

BANKS OF THE LECH, July 7.

Morean's army has entirely passed Ingolstadt and the environs, and proceeded to the Iler and the Inn. The right wing under general Lecourte, is gone against the prince of Renfo, who has been considerably reinforced.

NEW-YORK, September 11.

Yesterday arrived the ship Chesaapeake, Capt. Tombs, in 35 days from London—bringing papers to July 25, and in the evening arrived the sloop Boyne, Capt. Brown, from London, which he left on the 2d of August. The latest paper we bring is to the 1st, containing the account that Austria had concluded a general armistice with France, in which the King of Naples is not included. By those arrivals we have received our regularities from which we this day lay before our readers copious details which will be continued.

The English Ambassadors at the courts of Russia and Sweden have been abruptly dismissed, and have arrived at London. Some things more than an armed neutrality is augured from this conduct. It is regarded in England as an event unfavorable to a general pacification.

While these things are doing, the Russian Emperor Paul has written to the Pretender, that his residence in the Russian dominions will be dispensed with; and the unfortunate Louis XVIII. it is said, is about to return to England, where a sentiment of sympathy may at least procure him the attachment of the Prince of Orange, whose kingdom, like his own, is "not of this world."
